Over the last decade, undocumented young people built a civil rights movement from scattered protests into a nationwide network of activists who won DACA in 2012 and have fought back against the Trump administration’s efforts to cancel the program and speed deportations of immigrant youth. Two leaders of United We Dream, the largest youth organization with more than 400,000 members nationwide, will discuss how the movement has evolved and the prospects for Congress to pass a Dream Act with a path to citizenship for undocumented youth, including an update on Princeton’s recent SCOTUS case. They will also talk about their organizing efforts for the November elections, and what lies ahead for young immigrants depending on the outcome of the vote.

PRESENTERS:

Cristina Jiménez, Co-founder, United We Dream
Greisa Martínez Rosas, Executive Director, United We Dream

MODERATOR:
Julia Preston, Contributing Writer, The Marshall Project

Tuesday, October 20 | 5:00 - 6:30pm
Registration is required. Register for this event HERE.